

LHub Law and the Humanities Map

Dear friends,

LHub has recently released the Law and the Humanities UK Map in a beta version. This is an open-access evolving resource visualising and responding to the incredible diversity of law and humanities research in the UK. It is designed to spotlight research infrastructures where law and the humanities meet, co-exist, or work in tandem.

The map was created in collaboration with the Mapping the Arts and Humanities Project, in open dialogue with the research community, including focus groups and colleagues who have contributed and will continue to contribute to its shaping. We hope it is of interest not only to those of you working in/with the UK, but also as an invitation to think about mapping projects for our field more generally. The project has raised questions about our categories, self-representations, ways of finding collaborators, accounting for the place of our research within the wider field, and more.

We warmly invite you to explore the map, try out its interactive features, and discover infrastructures you might not have come across before:

Explore the Map

To learn more about the thinking behind the project, see this short introductory blog post:

Introducing the Map

Would the map be useful to your networks? We've also posted the info on LinkedIn, please share freely:

LinkedIn Post

Got questions? We've put together a short FAQ to help:

FAQ

Finally, the team would love your thoughts. If you have feedback or suggestions, they would be taken very seriously: this is an evolving project. You can comment here:

Feedback Form

If you'd like to get involved, or have an infrastructure in mind that should be represented on the map but isn't currently, or should be differently represented, please don't hesitate to contact the mapping team at mapping@sas.ac.uk.

Yours,
Anat

Anat Rosenberg

Professor of Law and the Humanities

Institute of Advanced Legal Studies

Charles Clore House | 17 Russell Square

London | WC1B 5DR

Tel: +44 20 7862 5821

United Kingdom

Webpage: <https://ials.sas.ac.uk/people/professor-anat-rosenberg>

Law and the Humanities Hub at IALS